Winter is here and it's getting colder and darker. Time to hunker down? Absolutely not, when there's guaranteed sun, beaches, superb food and fascinating culture a mere two hours away.

Sitges is an old fishing and wine growing town that has a history dating back to Roman times. It is delightfully picturesque to look at (ok, 'instagrammable'), a small bay with its famous Santa Bartomeu & Santa Tecla church at one end, with beauty and charm around every corner. Temperatures there in October, November are usually in the low 20s. I went in late October and there were a couple of days of 27 degrees.

Situated on the south coast of Spain, just below Barcelona, Sitges has been a holiday destination for Catalonians for decades. Indeed, its main tourists are Spanish (with Brits coming in second). It has been called the St. Tropez of Spain. Go off season and it's warm, relaxed, busy but not crowded.
